It was time for lunch and the two little mice, Jerry and Tuffy, were cautiously making their way toward the pantry. They knew ol' Tom cat might be lying in wait for them, but, as Jerry said, it was better to take their chances with Tom than to stay in their mouse-hole apartment and starve to death. Now, as they neared the pantry they began to breathe easier; it seemed this was one of those days when ol' Tom had something else to do.

As usual, the pantry door was slightly ajar, and in practically no time the hungry little mice were inside and busily exploring the crowded shelves.

They had been in the pantry many times before and knew almost exactly what they would find. Once in awhile they would discover something new and different; but they weren't at all prepared for what they found today.

Tuffy saw it first.

"Wow! Will ya look at this!" he shouted.

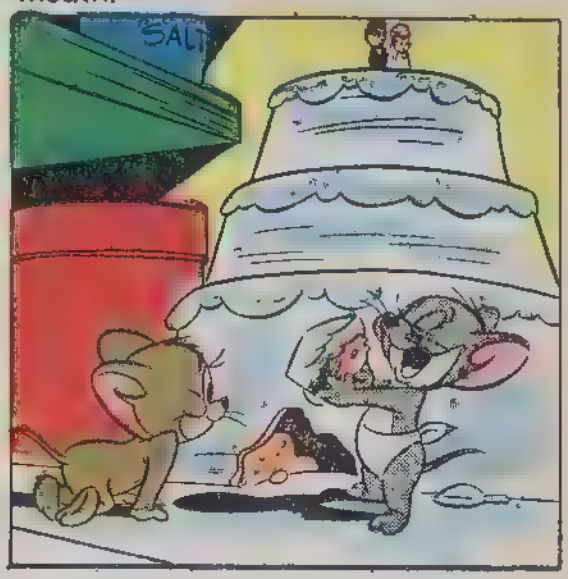
"Look at what?" said Jerry without looking up. He was busy munching a fat fig newton he had just pulled out of a box.

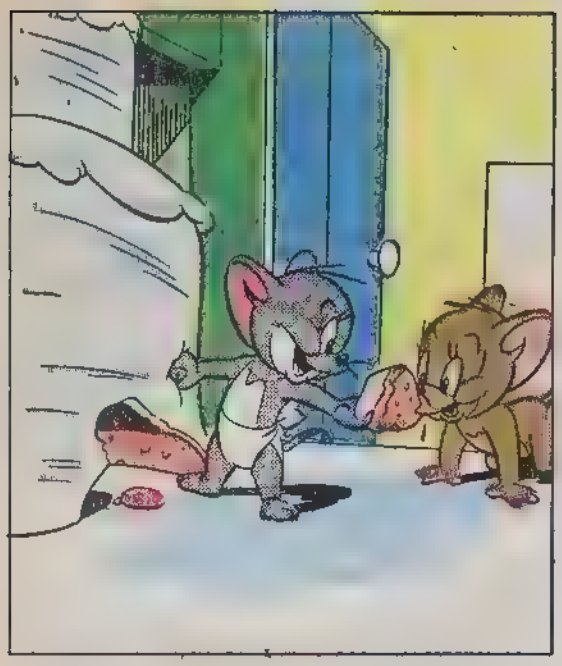
"It's a skyscraper a mile high with two people standing on top of it and does it taste good!"

"A skyscraper? two people standing on it? Hey, what're you talking about?" squeaked Jerry, dropping his fig newton.

"Come here! Take a look!" cried Tuffy. He sounded as though his mouth was full.

Tuffy's voice seemed to come from somewhere above, so Jerry quickly scrambled up to the top shelf. The first thing he saw was what indeed looked like a huge white skyscraper. It was built in round layers, one on top of the other, and each layer a little smaller than the one underneath. But strangest of all, on the topmost layer stood two little people, a man and a woman no taller than Jerry and Tuffy. Then Jerry noticed that Tuffy was busy yanking off chunks of the bottom layer of the building and stuffing them into his mouth.





"Yum, yum," said Tuffy between mouthfuls.

"Can you EAT that stuff?" cried Jerry.

"Sure. Here, try it," said Tuffy holding out a piece to Jerry.

Jerry sniffed at the piece and then timidly nibbled at it.

"Gosh, it's ICING! Just like they put on cakes!" cried Jerry. "That thing isn't a skyscraper—it's a CAKE! The biggest cake in the world, I betcha!"

It was a cake all right—a WEDDING cake. And the two little figures on the top layer were the kind you always see on a wedding cake—little dolls dressed as a bride and groom. But Jerry and Tuffy had never seen a wedding cake before and they were amazed that any cake could be so big.

"It'll take YEARS for us to eat all of this," said Tuffy happily.

"B-But how about those little people way up on top there?" whispered Jerry. "Maybe they won't like what we're doing."

"Well, they haven't said anything so far," said Tuffy.

"Maybe we better climb up there and ask 'em if it's all right," said Jerry.

"Okay with me," said Tuffy. "Let's go."

Jerry boosted Tuffy to the top of the first layer and then Tuffy reached down and helped Jerry up. The other layers were lower and easier to climb and soon the mice were standing at the feet of the little man and woman.

"Ahem," began Jerry. "D-Do you people mind if we sorta help ourselves to a little of this cake?"

"Yeh. It won't take much to fill us up, pal," said Tuffy, addressing himself to the man.

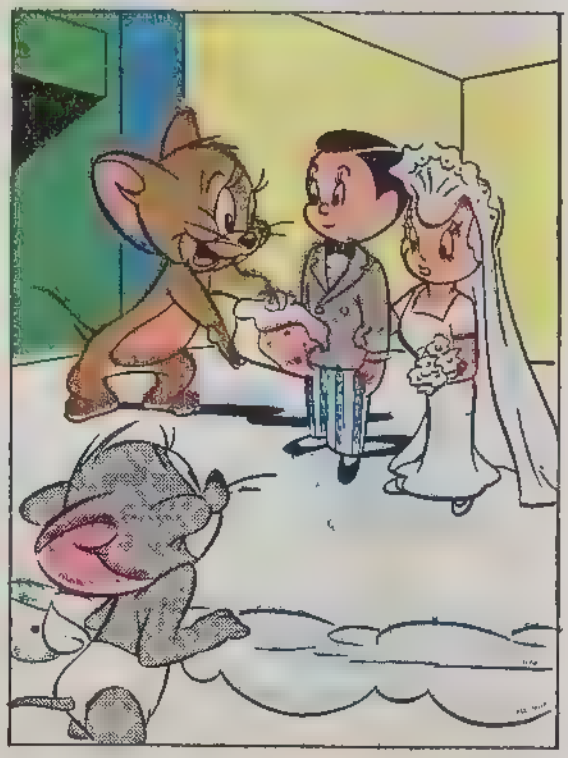
But the little man and woman said nothing. They just stood there and stared across the pantry. Then Tuffy reached up and tried to pinch the man's leg. It was hard and cold; it didn't feel at all like anything alive.

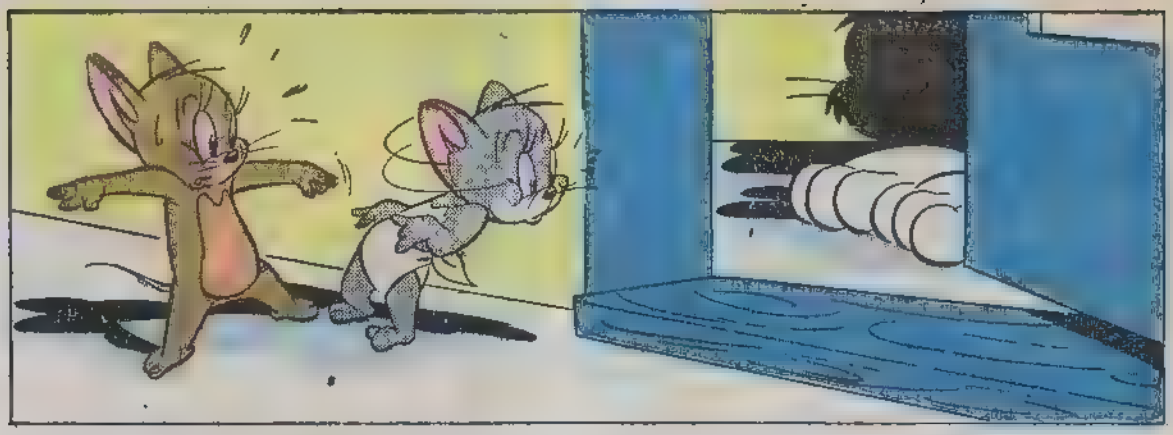
"Hey, Jerry, these are only dolls, I think!" cried Tuffy.

"Well, let's see," said Jerry, leaping up alongside the two little figures and peering into their faces.

"Gosh, you're right, Tuff. They ARE only dolls," cried Jerry. "But they certainly looked real."

"They sure are dressed fancy," squeaked Tuffy. "Just look at the striped pants on this guy."





"Yeh, and the beautiful veil and gown on the girl. She's even holding a little bunch of flowers on her arm."

"You know, they're dressed like people who've just been married," said Tuffy. "I saw 'em in a picture once."

"Oh, well, let's eat," said Jerry. "I'm still hungry."

So the little mice went back to stuffing themselves with chunks of the delicious icing until they couldn't swallow another crumb. Then they hopped down the side of the big cake and made their way to the floor of the pantry. Suddenly Jerry grabbed Tuffy's arm and swung him around.

"Do you see what I see?" he whispered into Tuffy's ear. "Look! Under the door!"

There, through the small space under the door, four big furry feet could be seen plainly. The feet were Tom's, and he was waiting to pounce as soon as the mice appeared around the door.

"G-Gosh! Lucky thing for us you saw him," stammered Tuffy. "What'll we do?"

"I—I dunno. Let me think," hissed Jerry.

"Well, think hard, pal. He's got us trapped in here," cried Tuffy.

"Shhh. Be quiet, will you!" warned Jerry. "I think I have an idea. Follow me."

Jerry led Tuffy back up the cupboard shelves and all the way to the top layer of the cake again.

"Now you do just as I say and don't argue," said Jerry.

In a little while they were on their way down again, but a remarkable change had taken place. Jerry was dressed in the little black coat and striped trousers of the man on the cake, and Tuffy was wearing the beautiful little gown and veil; on his arm he carried the pretty little bouquet of flowers. He also seemed to be very angry.

"You and your ideas," he muttered. "I never felt so silly!"

"Shh. You promised you'd keep quiet," pleaded Jerry.

"I'll keep quiet," grumbled Tuffy.

"Well—here goes, pal," said Jerry, as they approached the open door.

Tom was crouched down and waiting, his big yellow eyes ablaze, when two little mice marched out of the pantry. He gathered himself for the spring, and then suddenly lifted his head and blinked. This wasn't what he expected. Instead of Jerry and Tuffy, two strange little mice in very fancy clothes strolled out of the open door arm in arm. Tom hesitated only for a moment, then quick as a flash he stretched his big paw across the path of the advancing mice.

"Well, well," he purred. "This is a surprise. You must be new around here. Allow me to introduce myself."

"Oh," said Jerry. "Pleased to meet you. May I present my brand new bride? We're just starting off on our honeymoon."

"Too bad you'll have to cut it short," snarled Tom. "I got other plans for you. I'm HUNGRY!"

"Oh, there's a pantryful of goodies right in there," said Jerry pointing behind him. "We'd love to stay, but—"

"YOU'RE the goodies I have in mind," laughed Tom wickedly. "You and your blushing li'l bride!"

"Oh, you COULDN'T do that to us," cried Jerry. "Why, we've just been MARRIED!"

Tom hesitated. Way down deep in his cat's heart there was a soft spot for young married couples. And this was such a CUTE little couple.

"Well — all right," he growled as he drew back his paw. "But I'll be seeing you after your honeymoon!"

The mice drew a sigh of relief and were about to pass on, but suddenly the paw shot out again.

"Listen," said Tom shyly, "I—I'd like to kiss the bride if I may—"

With a scream of rage Tuffy tore off his veil and shouted, "I can't stand any more of this!" Then he flung his little bouquet smack in Tom's surprised, unwary face.

Before Tom could recover himself the mice were half way down the hall, and three seconds later they shot into their mousehole apartment less than two jumps ahead of the furious, pursuing cat.

"Gosh, Tuff, you almost spoiled everything," puffed Jerry.

"Yeh, I'm sorry, pal," said Tuffy. "I guess I just lost my head. But so would YOU if Tom wanted to KISS you."

"Hmm, I suppose so," said Jerry thoughtfully.

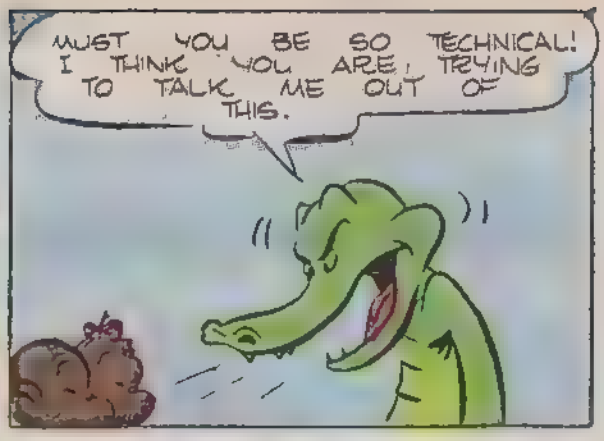
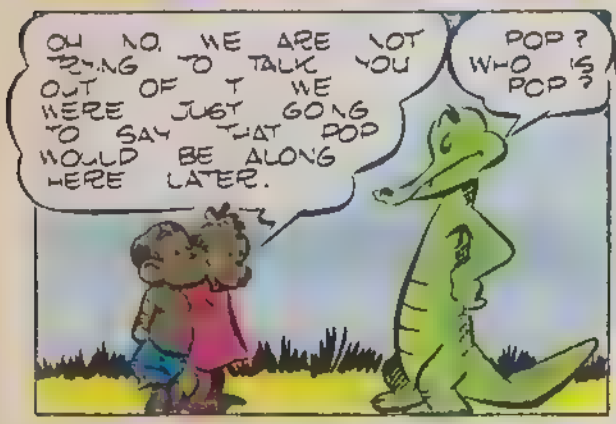
BUT THAT'S WHERE YOU ARE WRONG. WE ARE NOT MONKEYS.
OF COURSE NOT. EVERYBODY KNOWS WE ARE APES.



MUST YOU BE SO TECHNICAL! I THINK YOU ARE TRYING TO TALK ME OUT OF THIS.



OH NO. WE ARE NOT TRYING TO TALK YOU OUT OF IT. WE WERE JUST GOING TO SAY THAT POP WOULD BE ALONG HERE LATER.

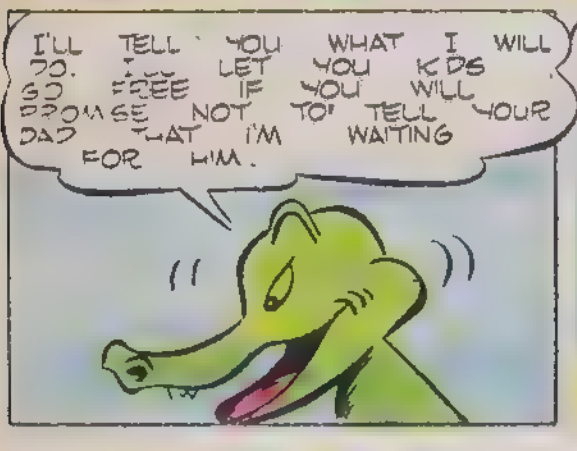
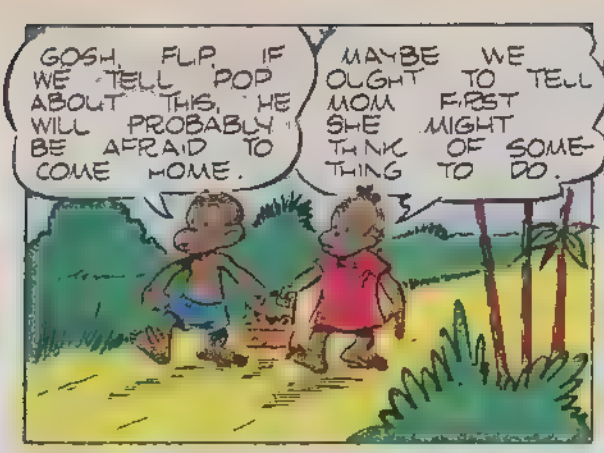
I'LL ADMIT, HE SOUNDS VERY TASTY.



I'LL TELL YOU WHAT I WILL DO. I'LL LET YOU KIDS GO FREE IF YOU WILL PROMISE NOT TO TELL YOUR DAD THAT I'M WAITING FOR HIM.

OH WE WON'T SAY A WORD TO HIM.
GIVE UR CROCODILE.
BYE BYE, LITTLE CHILDRENS. I'LL SEE YOU AROUND FOUR O'CLOCK.



GOSH, FLIP, IF WE TELL POP ABOUT THIS, HE WILL PROBABLY BE AFRAID TO COME HOME.

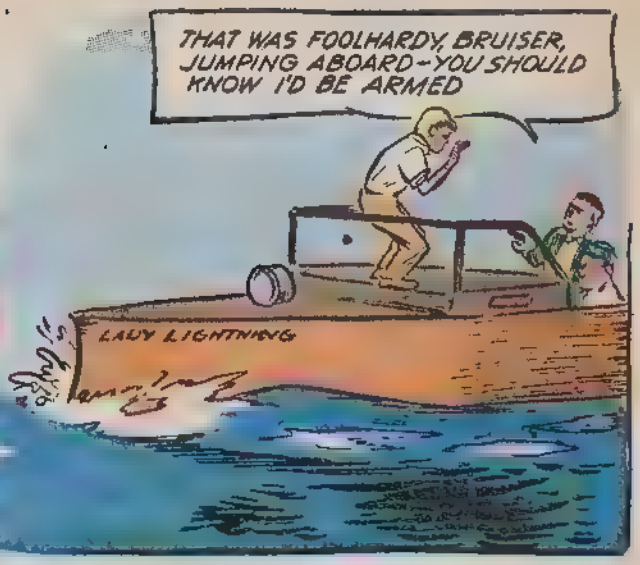
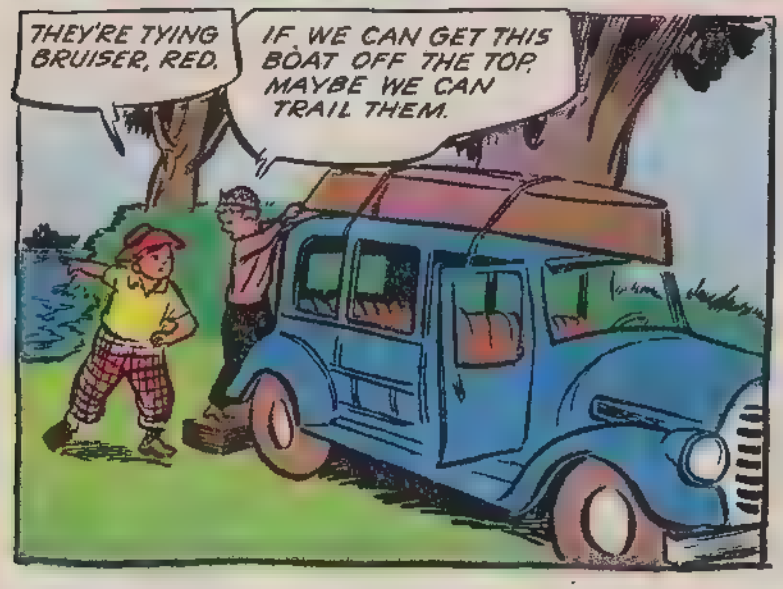
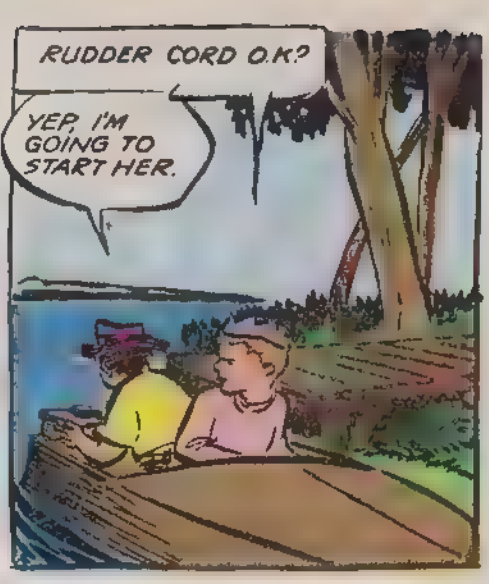
BRUISER CONNOR WITH RED AND EGGHEAD ARE ON THE TRAIL OF TWO RIVER PIRATES WHO HAVE STOLEN BRUISER'S BOAT.

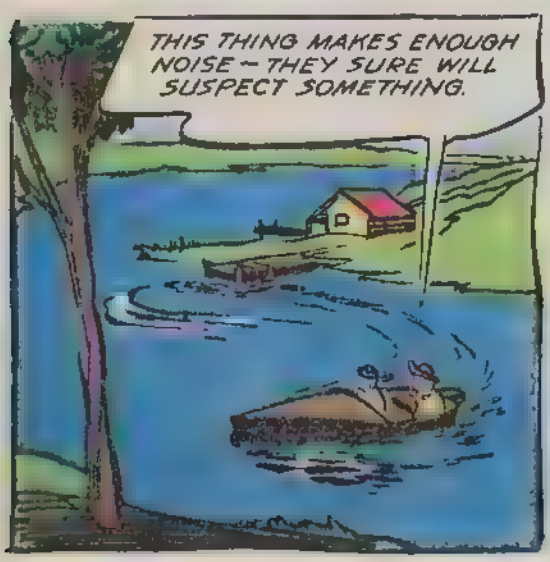




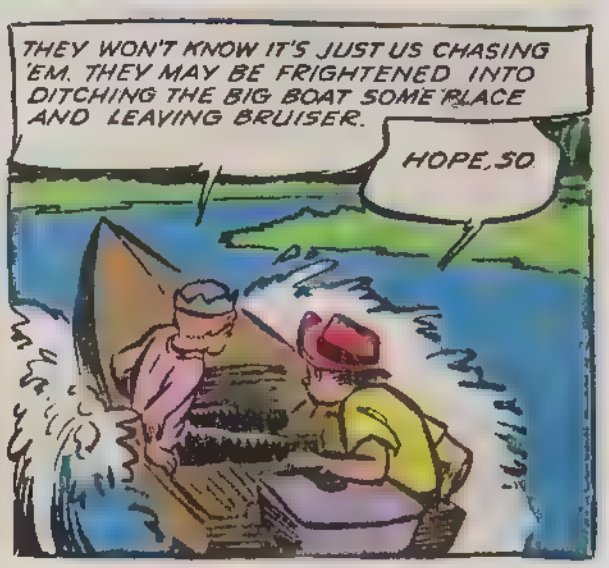
FUNNY THING, THEY MUST HAVE LEFT IT BY MISTAKE.
OR WE CAME UP ON 'EM BY SURPRISE.



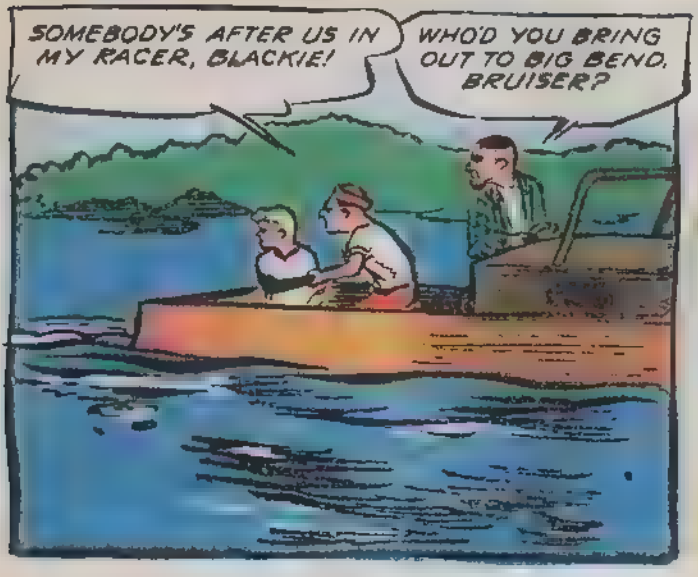
RUDDER CORD O.K.?
YEP, I'M GOING TO START HER.



THIS THING MAKES ENOUGH NOISE — THEY SURE WILL SUSPECT SOMETHING.

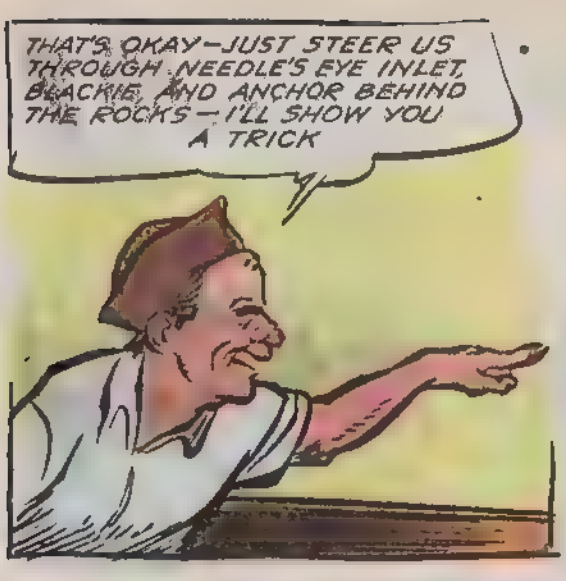


THEY WON'T KNOW IT'S JUST US CHASING 'EM. THEY MAY BE FRIGHTENED INTO DITCHING THE BIG BOAT SOME PLACE AND LEAVING BRUISER.
HOPE, SO.



SOMEBODY'S AFTER US IN MY RACER, BLACKIE!
WHO'D YOU BRING OUT TO BIG BEND, BRUISER?

THE SHERIFF AND ONE OF HIS DEPUTIES — AND THEY'VE GOT HIGH-POWERED RIFLES.

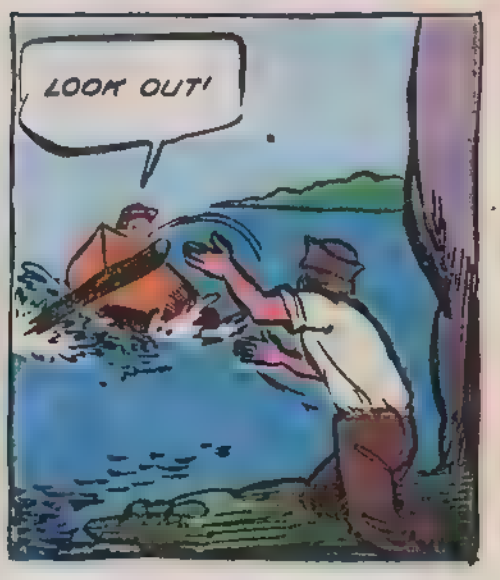


THAT'S OKAY—JUST STEER US THROUGH NEEDLE'S EYE INLET, BLACKIE, AND ANCHOR BEHIND THE ROCKS—I'LL SHOW YOU A TRICK

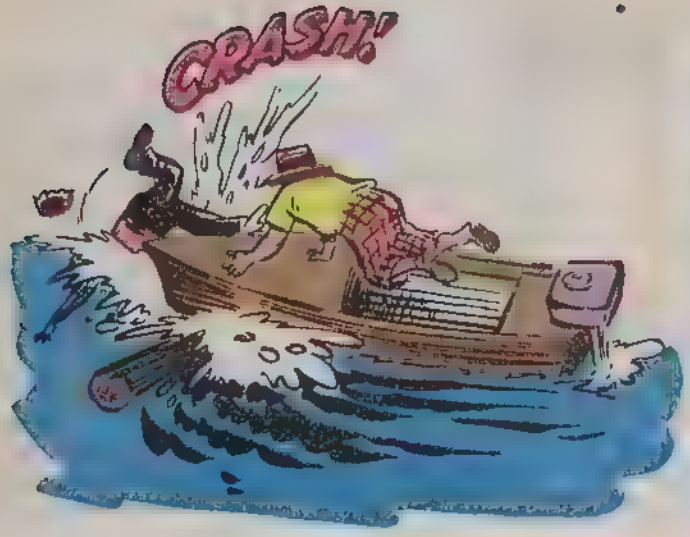
I HOPE YOU KNOW WHAT YOU'RE DOING.

DON'T WORRY—I'M GOING TO SHOVE ONE OF THESE DRIFT LOGS ACROSS THE ENTRANCE.
THEY DUCKED THROUGH NEEDLE'S EYE.

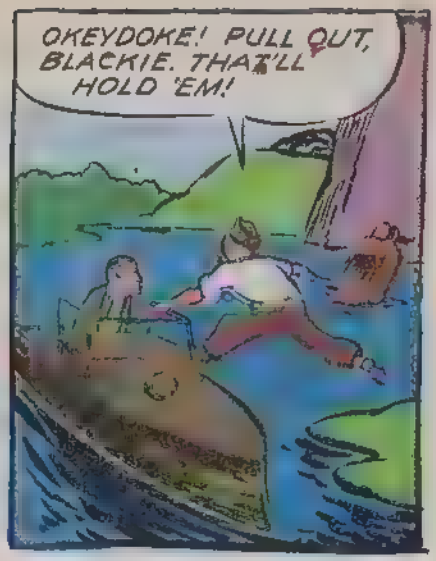
HERE THEY COME!
RIGHT!



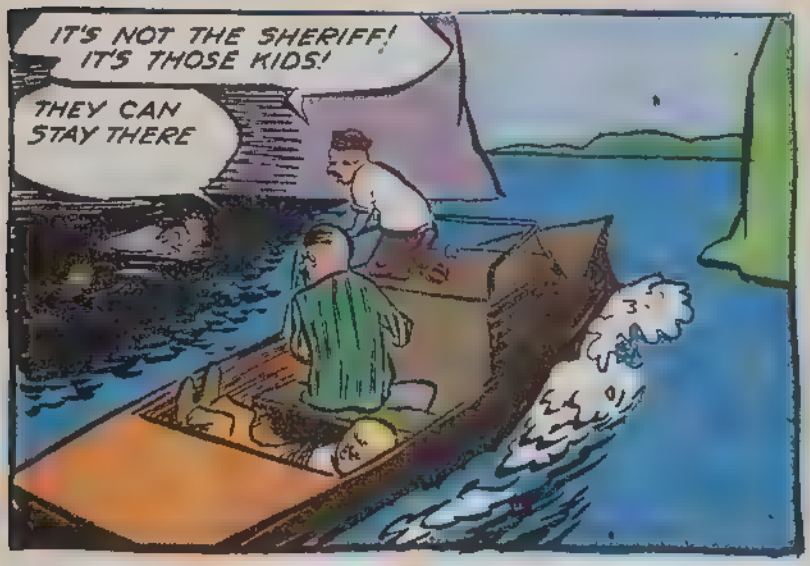
LOOK OUT!



CRASH!

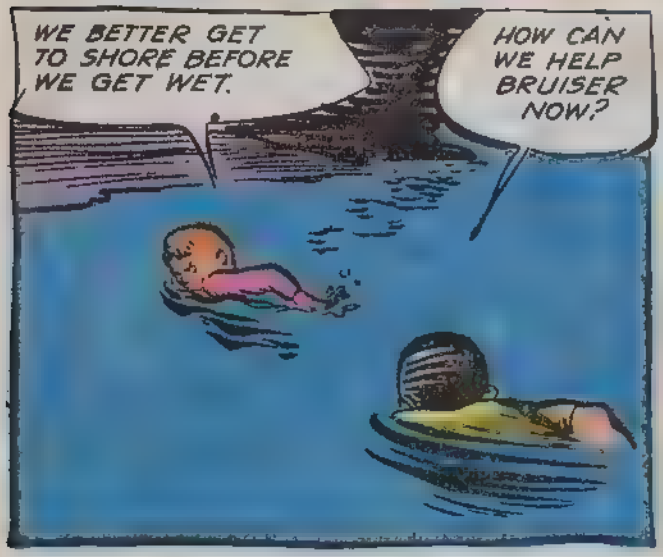


OKEYDOKE! PULL OUT, BLACKIE. THAT'LL HOLD 'EM!



IT'S NOT THE SHERIFF! IT'S THOSE KIDS!
THEY CAN STAY THERE

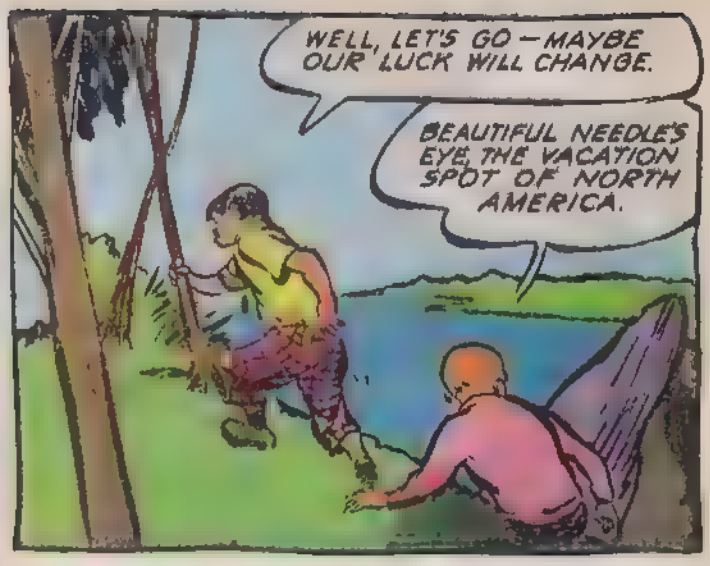
WHY, THOSE DOGGONE PIRATES!



WE BETTER GET TO SHORE BEFORE WE GET WET.
HOW CAN WE HELP BRUISER NOW?

NOTHING TO DO BUT HEAD FOR THE NEAREST TOWN AND PHONE THE POLICE
THAT'LL TAKE HOURS!

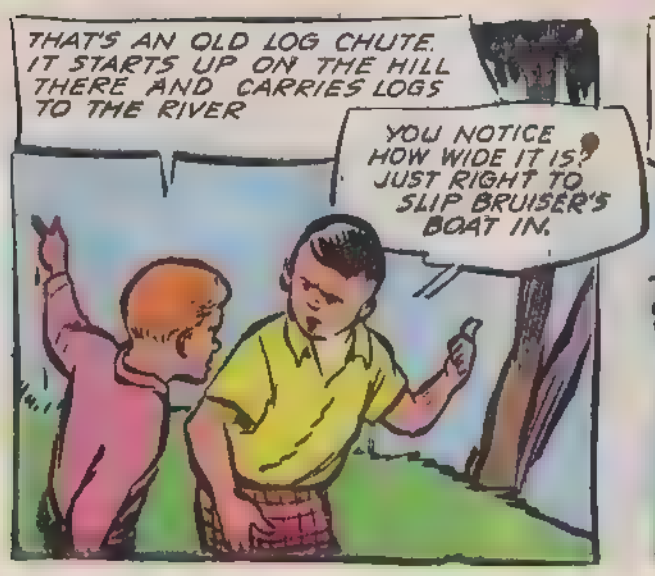
CAN'T EVEN GO BACK TO THE STATION WAGON; IT'S ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE RIVER.



WELL, LET'S GO — MAYBE OUR LUCK WILL CHANGE.
BEAUTIFUL NEEDLE'S EYE, THE VACATION SPOT OF NORTH AMERICA.

HEY—PSSST—HOLD UP! BURNS AND DINK ARE ANCHORED BELOW THERE

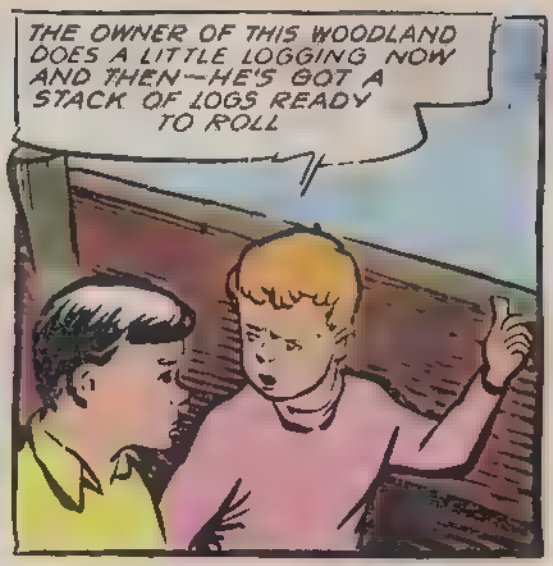
THEY DIDN'T GO FAR— WHAT ARE THEY POKIN' AROUND THERE FOR?



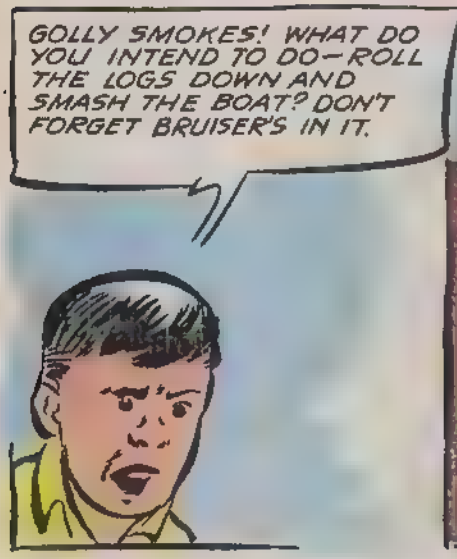
THAT'S AN OLD LOG CHUTE. IT STARTS UP ON THE HILL THERE AND CARRIES LOGS TO THE RIVER
YOU NOTICE HOW WIDE IT IS? JUST RIGHT TO SLIP BRUISER'S BOAT IN.

THEY'RE GOING TO HIDE THE BOAT IN THERE FOR A SUDDEN ATTACK ON THE RIVER BOAT "DEXTER." COME ON.

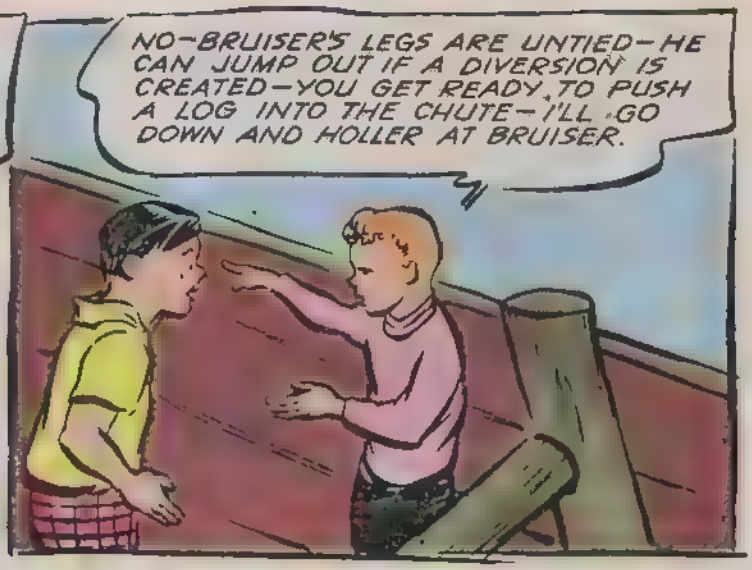
HERE'S THE START OF THE CHUTE.
WHAT'S THE PLAN?



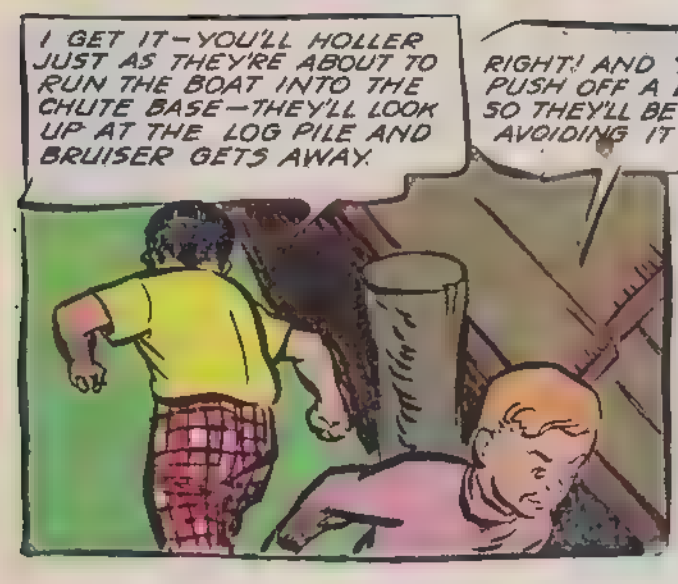
THE OWNER OF THIS WOODLAND DOES A LITTLE LOGGING NOW AND THEN—HE'S GOT A STACK OF LOGS READY TO ROLL



GOLLY SMOKES! WHAT DO YOU INTEND TO DO—ROLL THE LOGS DOWN AND SMASH THE BOAT? DON'T FORGET BRUISER'S IN IT.



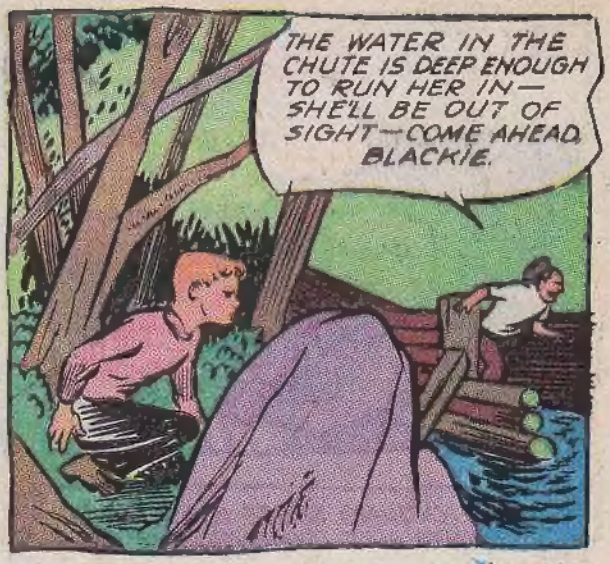
NO—BRUISER'S LEGS ARE UNTIED—HE CAN JUMP OUT IF A DIVERSION IS CREATED—YOU GET READY TO PUSH A LOG INTO THE CHUTE—I'LL GO DOWN AND HOLLER AT BRUISER.



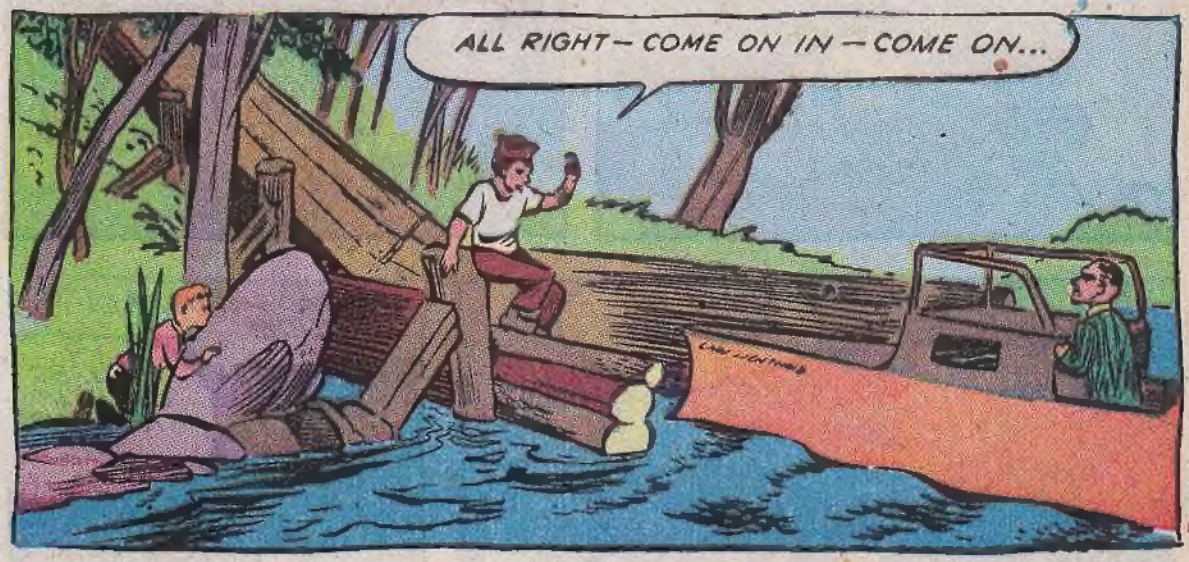
I GET IT—YOU'LL HOLLER JUST AS THEY'RE ABOUT TO RUN THE BOAT INTO THE CHUTE BASE—THEY'LL LOOK UP AT THE LOG PILE AND BRUISER GETS AWAY.
RIGHT! AND YOU PUSH OFF A LOG SO THEY'LL BE BUSY AVOIDING IT

OH, SURE; THIS'LL BE EASY—I'LL JUST REMOVE THOSE CHUCKS.

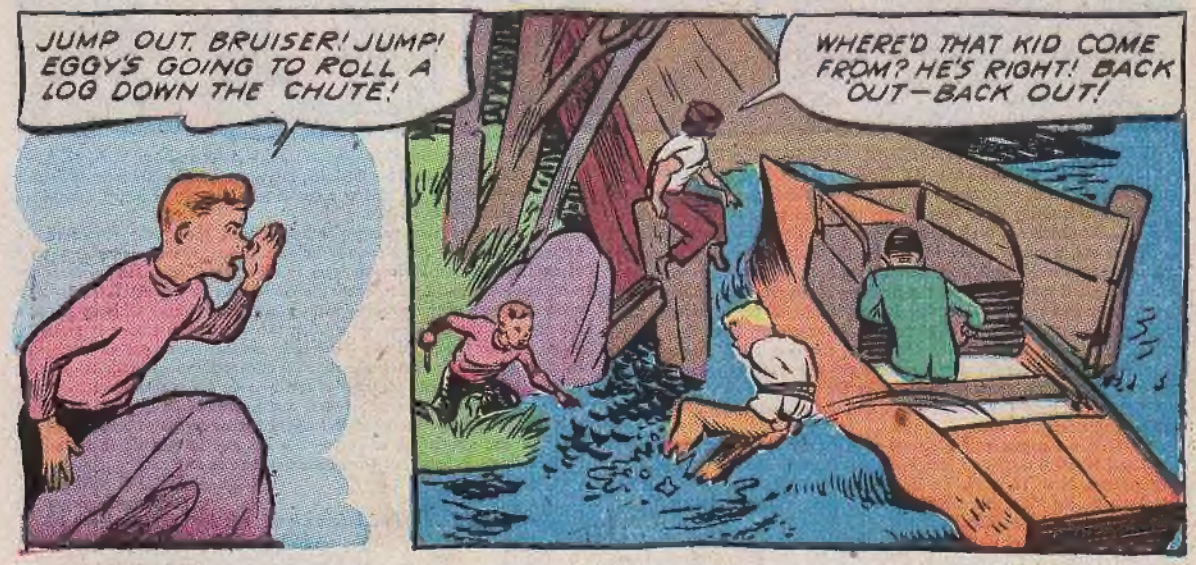
I'VE GOT TO STAY OUT OF SIGHT.



THE WATER IN THE CHUTE IS DEEP ENOUGH TO RUN HER IN— SHE'LL BE OUT OF SIGHT—COME AHEAD, BLACKIE.



ALL RIGHT—COME ON IN—COME ON...



JUMP OUT, BRUISER! JUMP! EGGY'S GOING TO ROLL A LOG DOWN THE CHUTE!
WHERE'D THAT KID COME FROM? HE'S RIGHT! BACK OUT—BACK OUT!
